1. There is no military garrison within the town limits of Teplice-Sanov (N 50-38, E 13-50); the nearest military garrisons are located at Most (N 50-32, E 13-39), Litomerice (N 50-32, E 14-08), and Terezin (N 50-31, E 14-09), and a small detachment of frontier troops is stationed in Dubi (N 50-41, E 13-47). The only military personnel stationed permanently in Teplice-Sanov are those in the offices of the Military Command, located in a one-story building in Masarykova Ulica opposite the OKO theater.
2. A military labor brigade is billeted in a number of buildings in Teplice-Sanov, including the former Hotel Botlik in Zelena Ulica, the Hotel Ruza, the Hotel Kotfa, and other buildings in Stalinova Namesti. The unit consists of 400 to 500 conscripts of military age employed in military construction works in Moldava, under the direction of the Severostav military construction enterprise, which has its offices at 2 Dubska Ulica in Teplice-Sanov.
3. An officers' school is located approximately four kilometers from Teplice-Sanov in the direction of Usti nad Labem. The school occupies three large buildings, formerly a Catholic convent. A Catholic church, adjoining the courtyard in which the three buildings are located, is still open to the public and is visited by tourists and by the inhabitants of nearby villages. The area is surrounded by a concrete wall three meters high. A large field outside the enclosed area serves as a training ground for the cadets and is off-limits to civilians; a number of posters warn passers-by that it is a restricted military area. The school, opened in 1949, accommodates approximately 500 cadets of Czech, Slovak and Hungarian origin. The course takes two years and, in addition to military studies, includes Russian, English and other languages. Uneducated cadets must complete their secondary education there and pass a matriculation examination.

4. A small military airfield is located on a plateau in the Brezina hills west of Mílesov in the vicinity of a small lake (approximate grid reference 355335, map of Germany 1:100,000 sheet S8). In 1952 when the movement of excursioners in the Brezina hills was still unrestricted and there was free access to the lake and plateau, military personnel equipped with tractors, excavators, etc., were seen repairing the road leading up to the plateau. At the same time about six military barracks and a number of single-engine planes were seen on the plateau. The approaches to the plateau have recently been closed to civilian traffic, and excursioners touring the Brezina hills and the numerous castles located at the foot of the hills are not allowed to proceed to the lake located near the airfield.
5. The highest point in the Brezina hills (grid reference 384354, map of Germany 1:100,000 sheet S8), north of Mílesov, accommodates Czechoslovakia's main meteorological station. A funicular railway, for light loads and not for passengers, has been installed between the meteorological station and a location at the foot of the hill, and is used for the transportation of foodstuff and other goods for the personnel at the station.
6. A small civilian airfield is located outside Most, west of the main road from Teplice-Sanov to Most. A large hangar, a number of small wooden structures, and some single-engine civilian planes were observed on this field in 1953-54. There are no concrete runways on the field. [redacted] this field is used for the training of members of the Československý Svaz Mládeže (Czechoslovak Youth Organization), who work half-days in the nearby coal mines and receive full board and secondary schooling in Most.
7. Captain Bodak (fnu) works in the office of the Military Command in Teplice-Sanov, in charge of the card index of reservists. He was a teacher in Carpatho-Ukraine prior to World War II and is a fellow-traveler.
8. Captain Dvořáček (fnu) [redacted] is the political officer in the office of the Military Command in Teplice-Sanov. [redacted]
9. Major Eszter (fnu) [redacted] works in the office of the Military Command in Teplice-Sanov. [redacted]
